The recurrence patterns and survival after resection for gastric cancer are influenced by the stage of the disease. The relationship between lymph node metastasis and recurrence of gastric cancer is still unclear. We reviewed the results of 546 gastrectomies for early gastric cancer performed in our hospital between 1978 and 1982. Sixty-six patients had N1, N0, N1 and N2, N3 and N4(3) in TNM classification. The recurrence rate was higher in N1 than N0 and N2, but the difference was not statistically significant. Five-year survival rates were comparable in N0, N1 and N2. N3 and N4(3) patients showed a significantly poorer 5-year survival than those with N0 and N1. Survival was slightly longer in N1 and N0 than N2, with poor differentiation being a limiting factor. For stage II patients with a wide resection, N1 was a significant prognostic parameter, in addition to the ratio of the extent of the mucosal to that of the submucosal layer, a histological factor which did not affect survival.The applicant has already proposed a manufacturing method of semiconductor devices, in which a semiconductor member having a surface which is partially mesa-etched is used as a surface planarization layer for the purpose of a contact-down structure in which electrodes are formed at intervals of 1 mm or less without being separated between contacts, and the resultant is used as a semiconductor device (Published Unexamined Japanese Patent Application No. 63-141531).
