Image caption The China-Vietnam border dispute is a source of deep concern for Vietnam. Nearly two years after a recent wave of anti-government protests started in Vietnam, an ethnic Chinese businessman has said he faces arrest and violence if he attempts to return home. And another ethnic Chinese businessman, who owns several shops in Hanoi, has told the BBC that his family is terrified of returning because of intimidation by a pro-government group. These two stories come on the heels of many more attacks against ethnic Chinese businessmen in Vietnam. The incidents in these cases show the hard line being taken by the government towards anyone perceived as backing the protesters.

Long queue to get to Vietnam
Mr Hung was at a security checkpoint at the main border crossing with China in the central province of Quang Tri in October 2015. "A policeman with a baton and gun came to me and told me to go to China," he says. "I told him I didn't want to go [to China], but he made me go." He says his wife was also held at the border and asked to identify him. "I told her I didn't know who I was because I don't have a face or body," he said. "She didn't speak any English." When it became clear that the border police did not know who he was, he was told to return to Vietnam.

Image caption Another ethnic Chinese business owner was forced to close his shop after pro-government thugs attacked him. "I went home alone. I was angry because I was scared to be arrested by the police again," he said. "My wife called me and asked me to open the door. I was surprised. The police told me to talk to the police again, and I said I would see the police again. I told my wife I would return to the border in Hanoi. I said I didn't trust the police and they would arrest me. I told them my name was Alan Hung." But he says when

The following image was created entirely in Adobe Photoshop Elements. 1. Create a New Document 1. Click on Image on the left side of the screen and choose New. The New Image dialog box will appear. 2. Click the New button at the bottom of the dialog box. 3. Here you can see all available sizes of the image. Make sure the size you want to use is selected. 4. The location from where the image will be saved is also selected. 5. The options: Want to Save As a New Document? and Open as a New Photoshop Document are checked by default. 6. Click OK to save the image into the folder where you have saved the document. 7. To rename the document, double click on the title and change the text. 8. Click OK to accept the document.

2. Create an Image

1. Select File > Open, or click the green + symbol. 2. Select the image from the selected folder that you want to use. If you are using another folder, change the folder path by clicking the arrow next to the folder path. The file size that you will use is also selected. 3. Click Open to accept the image. 4. In the New Image dialog box, click the circle arrow to the left of the size and change the size into the one that you want. 5. The crop options are also selected by default. 6. Click OK to accept the image.

3. Adjust the Color

You can adjust the saturation, brightness and contrast of the image. The options for each option are highlighted.

1. Select the Adjustments tab on the left. 2. Click the eyedropper icon. 3. Change the color of any part of the image by clicking and dragging over the area that you want to color. 4. You can adjust the brightness and contrast of the image by clicking the eyedropper button. Hold the Alt key and click on the image in order to change the brightness of the whole image. Clicking on the image with the Alt key will change the brightness of the top half of the image, if the preview is vertical or the bottom half of the image, if the preview is horizontal. You can also click on the eyedropper button to adjust the contrast of the image. If you hold the Ctrl key Truncated parvovirus B19 DNA in a patient with pure red cell aplasia. The authors present the case of a woman with pure red cell aplasia (PRCA) associated with truncal granulocytopenia with fragmented B19 VLPs. Serologic studies were nonspecific, but B19 DNA was detected in the patient's PBMC by PCR. Sequencing of the PCR product demonstrated a truncation of the left terminus of the genome. No other viral/cellular contaminant was identified. The patient was treated with immunosuppressive therapy and transfusion of multiple units of packed red blood cells (PRBC). After one transfusion, she had resolution of her PRCA. Analysis of the patient's PBMC revealed a clonally expanded population of T cells, CD57(+)/CD5(+)/CD8(+)/CD3(+)/CD45RA(+)/CD4(+)/CD19(-) by 4-color flow cytometry. Proliferative response to pokeweed mitogen was positive, and staining with anti-CD4 was negative, indicating an unusual in vivo regulatory T cell phenotype. Expression of CD27 and CD28 on the T cells was markedly down-regulated. This case demonstrates that the presence of B19 DNA, even in a PRCA, may be associated with the development of PRCA. The T cell phenotype was unusual in the patient and requires further characterization.Q:

Electromotive force in a helical waveguide composed of gallium arsenide-aluminum nitride heterostructure for terahertz propagation. We demonstrate experimentally the electromagnetic wave propagation in a dielectric-loaded structure composed of GaAs and AlN. In the structure, the terahertz energy is confined by both waveguides and helical phase shift is expected to be accumulated by the interplay of the guided plasmons in the waveguide and the helical wave induced by the dielectric loading. The non-resonant transmission in the structure is measured and an asymmetry in the transmission spectra is observed. It is ascribed to the change of the refractive index of the terahertz waveguide induced by the dielectric loading. A simulation explains the basic mechanism of the asymmetric transmission spectra. When the oscillating current flows in the structure, the electromagnetic field becomes helical and the phase propagation distance is determined by the thickness of the waveguide, the period and the amplitude of the excitation current. The conduction current-driven propagation results in the change in the propagation distance, which leads to the asymmetry of the transmission spectra.
