BULLET HEAT is an action-packed multiplayer shoot-'em-up VR experience created by indie developers, Plated Productions and Matrix VR Studios. Embark on a journey where your greatest opponent is yourself. As the last friend, you will now confront yourself. In YOUR self. And in the face of your own mortality. Enter a world where you are no longer the protagonist, but a permanent specter. A final friend. In a dying world where there is no One to save you. Find yourself alone. With only your friends to help you. Players will have the option to play as a silent background presence in the game or as a fully playable character that can engage in shootouts, solve puzzles, and perform air acrobatics. RIGS: Technology for Virtual Reality: RIGS is a technology platform designed to maximize the sense of presence in virtual reality. It solves a broad set of problems including multi-user VR, head tracking, FPS, and more. It has attracted the attention of industry heavyweights like Sony, Facebook, HTC, and Intel, and is being designed to cover all use cases including a VR headset, a modular tracked suit, and a HMD tracker. COVER THE ENTIRE VISUAL ENVIRONMENT FOR VIRTUAL REALITY: The Oculus Rift and the HTC Vive are both open source virtual reality headsets. These PC hardware devices have a 90 degree field of view on a wide variety of displays. Both support VR performance on both higher-end and lower-end laptops (so long as the display can support at least 180° horizontal field of view). LOW FOV IN VR PLATFORMS: The HTC Vive Pro, Oculus Rift S, Oculus Quest (in Early Access), Oculus Go (in Early Access), Oculus Rift (CV1), as well as the Gear VR and standalone VRP VR headsets all have low FOV, which varies from 42 degrees to 90 degrees. This is intentional, and the tradeoff is a feeling of immersion. Disadvantages of low FOV: You won't be able to see the edges of your virtual environment; effectively reducing the size of your field of view, and therefore making the world appear smaller in comparison. You'll lose the sense of presence in your surroundings when looking around, and will feel more like you're visiting a computer game rather than an immersive VR experience. Low FOV is not a limitation just d41b202975

Let us know what you think in the comments below. About Daniel Weiden Dan fell in love with video games at a young age. While attending school, he decided to try to make his passion his profession. During his time at college he worked as a tech support representative for a video game company, while getting a degree in telecommunications. Following graduation, he began pursuing game development as a hobby. In 2014 he started Turning Wheel, a company that focuses on indie game development. Degraded reactive sites within the Kunitz-type serine protease inhibitor brazzein. Brazzein, an endoprotease-inhibitor of trypsin and chymotrypsin, was degraded during both microbial and plant-extrinsic proteolysis and HPLC-ESI-MS analysis of the resulting proteolytic fragments showed that the mature protease inhibitor was cleaved at two sites. These sites corresponded to the single cleavage by subtilisin at the C-terminus of the protein and by pancreatic elastase at two internal Lys residues. Since the majority of the glycoprotein-bound brazzein retained its inhibitory capacity, it is likely that carbohydrate residues play a protective role in the binding of brazzein to its target enzymes.Q: AS3 - Performance - Combining multiple movies into one (adding/append) I have an application where I have a MovieClip that has multiple images on it. The images come from an external source, and are of the same kind, so I load them in using: image1.source = "path/to/image.jpg"; image2.source = "path/to/image.jpg"; etc. The image names all refer to different MovieClips, and I need to show the images as they come into view. Now, this is no problem if I have a few images on the screen, but it gets progressively slower as I add more images. The basic idea is that I am grabbing the same images, and adding them to different MovieClips, but obviously this won't work if they are already on screen. I'm looking for the most efficient way of doing this, but

What's new in The Last Friend: First Bite:

(A Reflection on Nate Staniforth's We Can Never Go Home) The Last Friend: First Bite was acquired for review. By Tim Schenck Nate Staniforth is making big waves in the erotica scene. His story, "The Mind and the Margins", was published by S.E. North in her fine anthology, FABRICS and a novella, "We Can Never Go Home", was published by Cleis Press. He's also nominated for an EXOTERRA award for best erotic horror ("We Can Never Go Home") and that's big news in a genre dominated by vampires, werewolves, and other canoodily deadly creatures with fangs and lupine urges. I first heard Nate talk at the Mac/ Flappers Feud held in Boston this past April and, although I wasn't a Flappers reader at the time, I was intrigued. He's an engaging, articulate, and perceptive guy who, during the Q&A, touched on a lot of different points of view that are important to the genre. As a long-time "slasher", I'm jealous of Nate: his publisher (Alpha Books) is putting out the best erotica out there - yes, the cover art contributes to the titillation, but it's the innovative prose - erotica/ fantasy/ horror plays well together - that's elevated Staniforth above the pack. I wish he would take on advice such as Slash to Success (founded by the fine Nora Roberts) or her erotica imprint, Obsidian Butterfly and collaborate with other authors such as Elizabeth York, Anastasia Bell, or just do his own book while at the same time teaching his craft with courses like the erotic writing workshop and book club he started with Naomi Novik in Tales to Lie By. One of the things that's great about the erotica genre is the integrated marketing campaigns. Evette Dionne's notoriety as the first Asian featured in Playboy caused a huge stir among the burgeoning Asian market. Sequential authors have all built their careers with constant marketing campaigns and press exposure. Clive Barker sold over a million copies by marketing a
