The ban will be served in the next four Premier League fixtures, ending with the draw between Liverpool and Manchester United at Anfield on March 14, and represents the longest suspension for an on-field offence since the FA introduced its current disciplinary regime in 2015. The sanction was handed down by independent panel on Tuesday morning, following a hearing in London, and was the result of Suarez's failure to accept the red card he was shown for the incident on Sunday. The Uruguayan winger can also be charged with using "opprobrious or abusive language" in connection with the FA's charge of "dealing with the media contrary to Rule E3 of the FA Code of Conduct", which relates to Suarez's attitude towards the media during the extended hearing. Watch:

Suarez reacts to red card The ruling from the independent panel of three former referees and two ex-players - which was met with a round of applause from supporters in the Kop - was made after the panel considered a submission made by Liverpool's lawyer, Malcolm Stewart, which included testimony from Suarez's medical team during the game. The panel has accepted that Suarez was not seeking to hurt De Gea and was merely attempting to block a high clearance with his arm rather than aiming at the United player. However, it found him guilty of a "public criticism of a match official" for the incident with United defender Phil Jones, who was booked during the game for his challenge on Suarez. "The referee's clear and correct decision was to caution Mr 0cc13bf012
